Read the Christmas Tale and enjoy this free story The woodcutter was looking in the forest and on his way to his home he saw a tall, strange tree. Even though the woodcutter was also dressed up in a nice red coat, he was unable to take a close look at the tree. Instead he just asked the strange tree: "Whom are you looking for? Are you looking for a friend, or for an enemy?". The strange tree just gave a hearty laugh and said "No, I am not looking for any one, nor for an enemy, but for a friend". The woodcutter looked more closely at the tree. He was surprised to see that the tree's branches were not the same colour as the other trees, but they were a beautiful white. He also noticed that there were lots of white, small flowers on the strange tree. The strange

Care quality disparities between hospitals and physician-owned organizations (POs) are demonstrated. This study compared hospital care quality in three private POs in Pennsylvania. Of 21 charges assessed in the top 5 diagnosis-related group (DRG), only one (pulmonary embolism) was more likely in the hospital-owned organization. The hospital performed significantly more appropriate "education/deposition" for each DRG. Only 2 of 21 (10 percent) charges were lower in the hospital-owned organization. The majority of charges were not statistically significantly different in the hospital-owned organization. The results raise concerns about utilization of "education/deposition" and the presence of unwanted care variation in POs. Supraventricular tachycardia originating from accessory pathway with subtle CT evidence. A patient with atrial tachycardia had a previous history of permanent ventricular pacemaker implantation. Holter monitoring showed 11 episodes of ventricular tachycardia with no change of the QRS morphology during the tachycardia. The tachycardia was proved by electrophysiologic studies to be the result of a concealed accessory pathway. The patient underwent successful catheter ablation. The clinical presentation included palpitations, marked hypertension and marked bradycardia. The electrocardiographic manifestations of the tachycardia were the same as in the holter monitoring. Findings of the computed tomography were normal. It is extremely difficult to diagnose the concealed accessory pathway that is the electrophysiologic substrate of the tachycardia. Adaptive immune response to intracellular pathogens. The mammalian immune system is composed of cells that are involved in the discrimination between self and non-self antigens and those that are involved in the identification of foreign antigens and the elimination or containment of pathogens. Only the non-self recognition components of the immune system are covered in detail in this brief review. These recognition molecules are best characterized in
