In connection with these, the number of input/output (I/O) ports of the portable electronic device is increasing. For example, along with the increasing I/O port number of the portable electronic device, the number of the input/output connectors and an assembly process of the input/output connectors are increasing. However, the assembly process of the input/output connectors is very complicated and takes a long time. Further, in order to input/output signals to/from the portable electronic device, a customized cable with an input/output connector is required. Therefore, there is a need of improving the assembly process of the input/output connectors and an assembly process of a cable.78,000 jobs created: Tech giant to hire soon Jobs and unemployment have been hot topics for most of this year. 2 Sausage Fiesta 2 is a dice game for 1 or 2 players, traditionally played with a small dice board or a set of 12 standard dice. It was created by Ray Greene and published by American Game Supply. History Sausage Fiesta was first sold in 1956 and was originally published by A.W. Jones and then Greene (the Sausage Fiesta won a Game Designers' Award) for game publishing. The popularity of the game grew after a recommendation from Napster. American Game Supply published the game in 2009 with Ray Greene as the creator. Gameplay The goal of the game is to be the last player to roll a two-spot roll or a three-spot roll, also known as a two-three and/or a two-four. If a player rolls the maximum number of dice before reaching this total, they lose the game. This is known as "one-ing" or "scrapping". Players take turns rolling one die each. Scraps are not allowed when rolling the last die (if this ever happens, a player is out of the game and no dice are rolled). As the game progresses, the amount of players who "one" decrease, as it is highly illegal to one-nap a player. Strategy To win the game, you need to be the last player to roll either a two-spot or a three-spot before the end of the round, thus "winning" means the two other players have lost the game. Strategy begins with the last player rolling a two-point. Finding the right number of dice for this roll can be difficult, because the game begins with the number of players (including the last player) reflected by the number of dice rolled. Therefore, the goal in this case is to minimize the number of dice used while maximizing the number that end up above a 2 or 3, and so can complete a two or three. If you have no choice but to use any number of dice to roll a two, for example, and your goal is to have all seven dice above a 2, then it is advisable to roll the dice in three groups of three to ensure one of the groups has at least a three in each group: 7 fours ----- 4 sixes 3 sevens This will ensure that there are a two in one group, and a three in each group. And in the above scenario, four
