Computer security is always a major issue nowadays. The sad thing is that the majority of the people have no idea how to protect their computers and their data. If not properly protected, one can lose money, personal information, business deals, and even face jail-time. For the first time, we now have the answer to all these issues. The new solution to all of the problems is a simple tool that is not even known by those who are facing the issues. The tool is called KeySim. It is the first of its kind and is basically an application which simulates the keys you are typing on your keyboard. A misconception is that this tool can only be used for cyber-terrorism. Yes, it is true that it can be used by fraudsters but the same rule applies to other means of frauds as well. The problem with the current solutions is that they all rely on third-party IT security companies or experts. There is not much need for people who are not tech-savvy to use these solutions. What KeySim brings to the table is that it allows anyone to create a custom macro file that will perform the actions that he or she wants. The first thing that the user is asked to do is to select the action that the user wishes to perform using the mouse and then the user can add keys to the macro file according to his or her preferences. The file is saved and the user is ready to perform any of the tasks in the file in the future. That's it, the process is done. The user can be anywhere within the world and from any device and can perform any action by simply clicking the mouse and it will simulate the desired action. The quality of KeySim
