Post-pericardiotomy syndrome (PPS) remains a potentially devastating and dangerous condition after cardiac surgery. We reviewed our experience to define more accurately the clinical presentation and management of PPS. We performed a retrospective review of patients who developed PPS at our institution. Presenting signs and symptoms, presence of fever, endocarditis, and new onset of atrial fibrillation were considered in the definition of PPS. Twenty-one patients developed PPS between January 2003 and December 2007. Median age was 45 years (range 19-71). A history of cardiac surgery was recorded in 18 patients (86%). Non-cardiac procedures included heart transplant, coronary angiography, and electrophysiology study. The median time from the cardiac surgery to the onset of symptoms was 65 days (range 13-455). Two patients developed PPS in the immediate post-operative period, whereas 19 patients developed symptoms later on. Seventeen patients (81%) had features of atrial fibrillation at the time of presentation. Two patients had evidence of endocarditis. Only 10 patients (48%) were given anti-inflammatory treatment, whereas nine patients (43%) required specific medical therapy. Ten patients (48%) required repeat cardiothoracic surgery, which was not associated with an increased risk of death, myocardial infarction, or atrial fibrillation. A high index of suspicion is needed to ensure that patients are diagnosed early. To decrease morbidity and mortality of PPS, it is necessary to treat it aggressively. If patients do not respond to conservative medical therapy, specific pharmacological treatment may be indicated. Repeat cardiothoracic surgery should not be restricted by the presence of PPS.Q: postgreSQL table indexes I've a web site where I use the Pg
